He Would Choose the Leak

If he had the choice between a secret war in Angola or a leak which stopped our participation, Otis Pike would, he said, "take the leak." The New York Democrat, chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, speaking to a group of newspaper publishers in Westbury, N.Y., also said the pending investigation of who leaked his committee's secret report on the CIA to the Village Voice would probably "go all around Dan Schorr but never touch him." Schorr, CBS correspondent, has admitted he leaked the report and now the House Committee on Standards and Ethics is supposed to find out where he got it. "I think now that the initial outrage over the leak has occurred," Pike said. "People are having second thoughts about whom they are investigating." And then, in an interview with the Newhouse News Service, Pike said: "We found that Secretary Kissinger yells McCarthyism whenever anybody criticizes him. I happen to think he is a tremendously able diplomat, but I don't think he believes much in democracy. I think he's impatient with the democratic processes."
